once vable way, with the hope that some query may possibly bring light to the blighted memory of the unfortunate young woman. When asked to recall even the given names of members of her family her brow contracts with the effort to do so, but she smiles faintly and says: "Oh, I wish I could, but I can't. 1 try very hard to remember, but something is the matter up here," putting a hand wearily to her brow. "My father's name is John Williams, and he owns a farm near the town in which we live. Our family never lived on the farm. but father went out every day to oversee the tenants, who looked after the land." Every physician in the City Hospital Is interested in the girl's pathetic case. It is interesting from both a physical and psychical standpoint, and doubly so when the pitiable condition of the young woman s taken into consideration. The only diagnosis so far advanced is amnesia, the technical medical term for lapse of memory

HAS READ STANDARD AUTHORS. Blanche Williams is educated and gives inmistakable evidence of refinement and gentle breeding. She converses intelligently on literature and music, and has a discriminating taste in both. "I graduated when I was 18 years old from the High School," she said in response to a question as to where she received her education,

"That was a year ago this June, but 't seems an age, and I can't remember where it was or recall the names of any of my classmates. Asked regarding the poets rend in the school which she attended, she showed an aptitude and an acquaintance with standard "Did you read 'Chaucer' in your course in English literature?" was asked her. "Oh, yes; we read his 'Canterbury Talea', but that was all. Of Milton's poems we only read 'Paradise Lost' and 'Paradise Regained.' 'Childe Harold' was all we read by Byron. I remember 'Locksley Hall' best of Tennyson's poems."

"Can you repeat any passage from Childe Harold," Harold,?"
"I could before I had this trouble with my head. Let me see, I only remember the passage where Childe Harold, leaving home, says, 'Adleu, adleu, my native shore fades o'er the waters blue; the night winds sigh, the breakers roar, and shrieks the wild sea-mew."

"I used to know a lot more, but I don't any more. Of Longfellow's poems, we read 'Evangeline' and 'Hiawatha,' of Whittler's 'Snow-Bound.' of Poe's works we read 'The Raven' and 'The Bells,' and, of course, every one has read 'Annabel Lee.'"

ASES VISITION TO SING ASKS VISITOR TO SING.
Miss Williams is fond of music. She hums the airs of popular music, but says she can't remember the words. Repeated to her, she brightens and says: "That's it; sing it to me, won't you?"

She remembers most of the popular strains from the light operas, and modestly says she can play them on the plano.

Her fondness for flowers amounts almost to a passion. Some sweet peas and a small rose were held close to her face the greater part of yesterday afternoon.

"We have lots of flowers at home," she remarked, wistfully, as she looked at the pink sweet peas. "Long rows of sweet peas of all colors like these. When do you think I will see them?" she can't remember the words. Repeated

A telegram sent yesterday to Vintondale, Pa., received an answer stating that Blanche Dillon, the young woman who Miss Williams was supposed to be, was at home and had not been out of town.

"CHERT" RECOMMENDED FOR FAIR ROADWAYS.

Exposition Officials Consider Qualities of Quartzite Substance for First-Class Pavement.

SMOOTH, NOISELESS AND FIRM.

W. W. Morrison, Engineer, Says Chert Is Better Than Any Other Material for Residence District Driveways.

Director of Works Taylor is endeavoring to find now a material which will meet all the requirements for the roadways of the World's Fair. Asphalt has many of the qualities which are considered most essential, but has the disadvantage of being a radiator of heat to an unpleasant degree. Several materials have been under consideration, among others the baked clay used by many railroads as ballast. Recently considerable interest has been taken in studying the qualities of a material used to a great extent in Southern cities, called 'chert." William W. Morrison, an engineer, who has had opportunities of observing the use of this material, said yesterday;

"The material will meet the requirements of a first-class sanitary pavement. In point of cost, durability and service it is not excelled.

"The substance is known as chert, or quartzite. It is very much like flint, is the hardest of rocks and will cut glass like a dlamond. It resists all disintegrating action of the weather when exposed. Practical use in various cities and places for roadway and street paving has proved its qualities. qualities.

"The rock is associated with a bond of softer and plastic material that is adhesive and is uniformly disseminated throughout the mass at the quarries. This acts as a cement or binding material.

POINTS OUT ADVANTAGES. "At the quarries the mass of rock forms about 90 per cent of the whole, having just enough of the bond to cement the crushed and prepared rock into an elastic and com-pact mass resembling concrete. It differs, however, from cement, as when the bond is broken it will form and cement again, after a thorough rolling or tamping, whereas ce-ment, or concrete, is brittle, and when once cracked or broken cannot again be united. "I am prepared to say that quartile me.

ment, or concrete, is brittle, and when once cracked or broken cannot again be united. "I am prepared to say that quartzite material for pavements combines all the advantages, when used especially for residence districts of a city, to a higher degree of utility than any other kind of material known.

"By making a foundation, such as is used for ordinary pavements, and covering with six inches of quartzite material with hond and rolling it hard to place, and then adding two or three inches of the top or surface diressing of the finer or screened material, with bond, and rolling it thoroughly into a solid mass, a perfect pavement is obtained. "These pavements have proven intact and perfect after several years of severe and constant service. The wearing surface is perfectly rigid. The quartz or top dressing is so closely imbedded as to resist all efforts to impair it, except by the pick, Pavement made from this material, after long and constant use, proves itself almost indestructible, either from wear or from disintegration and decay.

"It is as self-cleaning as asphalitum, vitrified brick or granite, and it would never be dusty or muddy if only properly cared for. "This pavement makes a firm footing for horses, is smooth and noiseless, is somewhat absorbent, and when sprinkled is not alternately flooded and dusty. It is self-cleaning by a heavy rain, and without extraordinary crowning required by other pavements. It is far the cheapest good pavement in existence, costing less than one-half as much as asphilitum, and having all the essential qualities claimed for other materials."
